FARM NOTES

New-comers to Florida, looking for orange groves, always of interest to tourists, sometimes comment that the groves are unweeded, being full of weeds, whereas the groves and orchards elsewhere are maintained under a method of "clean cultivation," there being no weeds or grass. There is a good reason for the Florida practice. Summers in Florida are long, the sun almost the year through, and the rays of the sun are penetrating. Therefore in Florida the practice of "cover crops" to protect the soil from bad effects of prolonged exposure to the sun.

Three years ago a farmer on the lakefront got himself a bunch of hogs and the prospect seemed good for making some money out of them. He hadn't any hogs now. The reason, he says, is that too much money was made out of the hogs. There is a double job to be done, particularly as to fencing. There is a double job to be done, particularly as to fencing. originated in the groves of the sand lands of the Everglades by force of habit was extended to the muck lands and was continued here because of its convenience. But, really, are cover crops needed in the sand lands? Many growers declare the weeds have fertilizing value when used as a green manure, particularly Palm grass, and this being true and may be a good reason for letting weeds grow for climate calls for difference in methods. One reason for clean cultivation in the north is to prevent the seeds of obnoxious grasses from being scattered. Here the seeds need to be and the time may come when their spread will have to be combated.

The leading article in the July issue of Florida Farm and Grove is headed "Glades Ready for New Crop Season." The article is as accurate as it is interesting from a publication that is not in position to deal with conditions in the Everglades at first hand. The accuracy of the article on Glades affairs is always disclosed when they prefix an apostrophe as if it was an abbreviation. Glades is a complete word and there is no warrant for using it in any other form. The progress of the article on the Farm and Grove section might well refer to any standard dictionary.

No, indeed, I am not a calamity howler, but should some of my "exaggerations" fall—such as nations settling their differences around a conference table—there is nothing to keep us steadily prone from invading the United States? Think it over and then tell me I'm wrong.

Perhaps no home in all the world would attempt to banquet seven hundred people entirely under the open roof. Its dining rooms and its kitchen and kitchen service would, undoubtedly, prove wholly inadequate.

Yet if single, ordinary households Frigidaires, such as may be found in hundreds of thousands of small American homes, can be frozen sufficient ice cubes to provide one cube in the drinking glass of 700 persons.

This amazing fact is being brought out graphically at a special demonstration now going on at Boe's Automotive Service in Pahokee, authorized dealers.

"Yes, we can do that easily," said Olaf Boe, manager of the firm. "In fact, we actually have the ice cubes themselves on hand to prove our point—over 700 of them—weighing more than 80 pounds in all. Every single one of them was frozen within the prescribed time."

Boe, for the proof meeting, a few of the cubes were placed inside the regular food compartment of the Frigidaires, in which they were frozen, the cold control turned down to a temperature point below the melting point of ice, there they will remain "for anybody to inspect."

"Of course, we do intimate that the average Frigidairer never will need any such quantity of ice in so short a time. But whether he needs it or not, he can have it if he wants it. We have talked quite a lot about Frigidaires' ice-ability, and now we are doing more than talking. We are demonstrating that ice-ability in such a way that everybody will clearly understand exactly what it is. We have talked the reason for our own enthusiasm."

A couple of residents took a boat down the canal the other day to fish in the lateral canal. While they were unloading the boat an automobile went by, at such a rate of speed that a man on the roadside was pulled into the road to the rear of the car by the momentum of air that was set up. By the time he righted himself, another car was coming at him at the same speed. When he got back to town he commented that the trees planted along the roadside will not serve to stop a car from going into the canal if the car is running at the speeds he noted.

Trees planted between the canal and the road are good things; the road system will hold the soil together and prevent erosion of the shoulders and slipping of the bank, but those trees are brittle, as are small American homes, can be frozen sufficient ice cubes to provide one cube in the drinking glass of 700 persons.

MR. R. E. BOE'S OPINION

To the Editor:

The Everglades News mentioned hurricanes and dikes. Being one of those who never left because of a storm since 1921 and therefore having had a chance to see the results of wind and water I should like to give you my observations, mostly of the one in 1928.

Half a dozen miles from the lake set the water to the ridge but none of them came up to a 150 mile wind and better like "the big wind" in 1928. If I am correct the lake was around 16-foot elevation when the 1928 hurricane struck and we were that way when the extremes of a 16-foot lake. I marked the spot on the ridge here on our property to where the water once found that if it had gone up one more foot it would have rolled over the ridge.

Shortly after 1928 the U. S. Experiment Station at Belle Glade put in a set of test wells in our field, running from the lake front to the railroad and before putting in the wells surveyed the land for its level. One well was put on top of the ridge and its level was 22.8 feet, or say 23 feet. So the worst of a 150 to 175 mile wind could do to a 16-foot elevation lake was to set the water at the 22-foot level. As said before, we had one foot more to spare in 1928 before it would roll over the ridge. Now, if the U. S. Engineers would pile rocks on the present lake shore to a height of the 22-foot level, the water would never get over the rocks; at least not for a wind we have had so far, and the spray the dike itself would easily carry far. Should the U. S. Engineers not be willing to guarantee that, I will.

They left for their home in Missouri at that time promising to return with Rev. Grigsby commented that they both needed a rest, and had fulfilled their promise to the people here. Rev. and Mrs. Ferdon and daughter of Arcadia have arrived to assume the pastorate.

COUNTY BUDGET

What the expenses of Palm Beach county are is set out in an official publication of the budget figures printed in this issue. The budget is a summary of the methods and costs of county government, in which all citizens should be interested.

Filed for action when the budget finally is adopted were certificates of 1937 assessments by the Pahokee and Pelican Lake drainage districts. The Pahokee district certificate showed an acreage of 19,669 on which taxes would range from $1.40 to $1.95 an acre. The Pelican Lake district certified proposed assessments ranging from $2.85 to $3.00 an acre, a total acreage being 8,132.

A Few Weeks And Then Activity

One vegetable season ends—a few weeks pass and another season is at hand. It is an endless effort to bring forth from the fertile muck crops on which to cash in.

A few short summer months and then tractors start humming—and seed will be going into the ground. Then comes the harvest and the hope that prices will be profitable.

That's where we come into the picture. Brokers and growers use a lot of printed matter during the run of a season. We're always ready to furnish it on short notice. But, it would be great if you'd place your order in advance this time.

Of course, we're full of new ideas about printing and will be pleased to pass them along to you.
